101 RANCH SHOW
 Draws Big Crowds Wednesday—Enthusiasm Aroused by Appearance of Jess Willard.

Miller Brothers and Arlington's 101 Ranch Wild West show attracted a big crowd to the city Wednesday. The show arrived in town about 5 o'clock. Twenty-two cars carried the five hundred and twenty members of the big show, the two hundred horses and all the trappings, wagons, etc., as well as the drawing card of the show, Jess Willard, champion of the world.

The cars were rapidly unloaded, one section at the crossing at the foot of Milk street and the other at the crossing between Main and Jackson streets. At 10:30 a very good street parade was given.

The afternoon show was crowded chiefly with women and children and at night the big tent was filled to capacity. The champion, who boxed three rounds with Walter Tomahan, who travels with the show for that purpose, aroused a great deal of enthusiasm.

During the day Chief Richmond stationed special traffic officers at the Jackson and Union street crossing, at the point on Jackson street where the street is being paved, on Main street near Ash and at the entrance to the show grounds, on Bacon's lot, on Nat-chaug street. It was probably due to the chief's foresight in this respect that there were no accidents reported throughout the day.

STORRS SUMMER SCHOOL.
 Interesting Addresses in Library Institute—Frank C. Wilcox the Speaker Wednesday Afternoon.

At the Tuesday morning session of the library institute at Storrs, Mrs. B. H. Johnson gave instruction in classification. The afternoon lecture was given by Miss Hadley on the subject of Reference Work and Reference Books. She spoke first of two uses of books, consecutive reading, which covers cultural and recreational reading, and the use of books for definite information, that is, reference work. She quoted Mr. Bostwick's definition of the conventional reference book as a book not for consecutive reading but for consultation.

Reference work may be encouraged. Instead of saying that there is little room for reference work in the small library, the librarian may promote the use of the library in this direction. There are three points to consider in the work: the material, the public and the librarian. In considering the material, before buying extensively, librarians should know thoroughly the books on their shelves. In buying, consider the industries of the community and the groups of people whom the library should serve. Before purchasing conventional works of reference, which are usually expensive, the librarian of the small library should consult some authority as to the value of the work and its value for that particular community.

The librarian should not do too much of the reference work for the patrons, but should judiciously help them to help themselves. In doing reference books, consider editorship, date, bibliographies, fullness of entries and indexing and cross references. Books which the local library does not own may often be secured through inter-library loans. Much reference work may be done with clippings from newspapers and periodicals. If such material is preserved.

The successful reference librarian must know people and be able to judge quickly the character of the inquirers, to distinguish at once the serious reader from the superficial type. Business men should be encouraged to use the library and its resources should be made known to them. Special encouragement should be given to the intellectually ambitious and among this class may be found many of our foreign-born citizens.

The librarian, to do successful reference work, must develop herself along every line, if possible, by reading good books, by contact with people. A broad general knowledge is most valuable, combined with a good memory and mental alertness. On Wednesday afternoon Frank G. Wilcox, librarian, Holyoke, Mass., spoke on Our Widest Field. This (Thursday) afternoon Miss Edith Whitney, librarian of the Connecticut Agricultural college, will speak on books on agriculture and country life. Miss M. Estelle Sprague of the extension department of the college will speak on the club work among boys and girls in country towns.

 Court of Inquiry Adjourns Till Report of Poison Investigation is Received—Death of Mrs. Hattie Hallam Raymond.

The court of inquiry, composed of Justices of the Peace Albert R. Stillman, William A. Wilcox and Heman J. Holdredge, instituted to make inquiry into the cause of death of Mr. and Mrs. Francis T. Brightman of Stonington, alleged to be due to poison taken in food in a Pawcatuck restaurant, met in adjourned session in the town court room in Stonington borough Wednesday morning. Pending the reports of Rhode Island and Connecticut coroners, the court adjourned to a scientific investigation to determine the nature of the poison, the court adjourned, subject to the call of Prosecutors Edmund H. Jewett, who is conducting the inquiry.

It was announced that chemists of the two states had reported that no traces of poison were found in the food, but inference was made that the poison was isolated by the bacteriologists, and as a matter of fact, it had been isolated, but that no further action would be taken by the court until an official report was made in detail.
